

Summarized essence of the account of the late Dr. John B. Tsu by Mr. Quentin Wilson; the interview was conducted over the phone on July 8, 2010

Mr. Quentin Wilson started to give his account of the late D. John B. Tsu by saying that the first time he met the Dr. Tsu was at one of the meetings at Capitol Hill in Washington, DC in the early 1980's though the introduction of the former Majority Leader in the House who was, then, one of leading and prime mover for an introduction of a new bill in the House, pertaining to "balance trade policy" known as "Gephardt Amendments", deigned to keep trade relationship to be based on the principle of "Equilibriums" in the bi-lateral and multilateral relationship.

At that time, US Foundation for International Economic Policy was advancing its activities and programs of, 1) establishment of Japan branch of US universities in partnership with Japanese regional governments and 2) development and implementation of economic and business assistance programs to assists American small and medium size companies. On the both projects, the late Dr. Tsu played a leading role in working with administrators, professors and staff of more than 140 universities in the States to provide them with what is about this program of establishing branch campuses of American universities in Japan and organized an educational mission to Japan to tour rationalities in to discuss with the host regional governments and its communities there. Headed by the former Governor of North Carolina, Governor James B. Hunt, 41 members delegation visited Japan in the early 1980's to interact with Japanese host entities with whom US delegation discussed the proposal of establishment of the branch campus of American universities. Dr. John B. Tsu played a key role in coordinating on this project with the parties involved on the both side of the Pacific Ocean.

The late Dr. John B. Tsu was so energetic and entertaining for Japanese customers enabling them to interact with American delegations of small and medium sized companies participating at G-BOC (Global Business Opportunity Convention) held in Osaka for many years since 1980's . The late Dr. Tsu impressed me in many ways, one of which was that he had very creative ideas. He maintained that economic growth and its fruits will play larger and greater role rather than that of military for the wealth nation and also for the peace of the world. This idea is being shared by Congressman Gephardt.

I know that the late Dr. John B. Tsu were very active in his political and social mission for the enhancement of Asian Americans by which Asian Coalition forces are becoming the mainstream of American politics in the recent years, for which the late Dr. John B. Tsu is to be given a lot of credits .

I know that he had the desire of seeing that mainland China and Formosa be united together, for which his last tenure of political mission was devoted.

I am very fortunate to have worked together with him and Mr. Yusuke Kataoka through US Foundations for International Economic Policy.
